PERSONAL STATEMENT

I am a relational-centred, existential Integrative Psychotherapist and Supervisor (UKCP registered) in private practice, previously having worked in the mental health field as an occupational therapist since 1977 (currently not registered). In my academic work, I teach psychology and counselling at the Open University (UK). I also teach/mentor psychotherapy students and supervise masters'/doctoral research in institutions in the UK and across Europe.

My research interests include the application of relational-reflexive, existential, hermeneutic phenomenological approaches to exploring the lived experience of disability and trauma. I have published widely, being best known for my textbooks on psychotherapy, psychosocial occupational therapy, and also qualitative research. My two recent books are psychotherapeutically focused: Relational Integrative Psychotherapy: Engaging Process and Theory in Practice (Wiley) and Practical Ethics: A relational approach (Sage). I am currently the Editor of the European Journal for Qualitative Research in Psychotherapy.
